With great pleasure and a profound sense of academic responsibility, we announce the launch of Philogram, a double peer reviewed annual research journal published in the hybrid model by the Department of Philosophy, University of Kerala. The journal is dedicated to fostering discussions and debates on various philosophical traditions and contemporary themes of philosophizing. Our aim is to encourage originality of thought and research across varied philosophical traditions. We aspire to provide an intellectual space for well-established traditional wisdom but with an openness to new avenues of thinking. Our philosophy is commitment to originality of thinking, comprehensiveness of argument, critical thinking and ingenuity of scholarship. Philogram is the fruition of a long-term aspiration for a research journal in Philosophy that would engage robust debate and rigorous open inquiry.

We welcome submissions that are intellectually honest and critically engaging and hence our policy is not to restrict the scope of the journal to any specific intellectual terrain. Even though the author enjoys liberty of thinking, we have comprehensive guidelines for authors, reviewers, and the editorial team. The methodology is defined clearly so as to maintain academic integrity. Philogram will appear in dual mode, both online and print form so as to maintain ease, regularity and periodicity. The editorial policy is to provide authors with timely decisions and helpful comments. Upholding the above values, we present the inaugural issue before the readers and we believe every article sustains the spirit of wonder that makes it truly philosophical.

We are proud to announce that the journal is financially assisted by the University of Kerala and the printing is done at the University press.
